

Abbey College have good experience with SportsArt fitness equipment

As part of the curriculum and in preparation for the introduction of the Sports and Active Leisure Diploma, Abbey College Cambridge, an independent 6th form college, appointed SportsArt Fitness UK to supply and install a range of cardio and strength training equipment into their new gym.

It was whilst attending the national Association for Physical Education (afPE) conference at the Emirates Stadium that Abbey College was first introduced to SportsArt fitness equipment and invited the company to tender.

Neil Suckling at Abbey College headed up the project, reviewed potential suppliers and reported on his findings.

“The Diploma in Sport and Active Leisure will provide students with the skills, knowledge, and attributes necessary to enter the sport and active leisure industry and to make a valuable contribution to the sector. The investment in a new gym and professional quality fitness equipment by Abbey College will provide the students with the best facilities for exam based courses, linking theory to practical experience and provide for excellent motivation.

Abbey College invited a number of fitness equipment suppliers to quote and SportsArt was one of the first to respond. Selection of the right products was essential as the facility would be used all year round and had therefore to be reliable, simple to operate and maintain. In viewing SportsArt fitness equipment first hand, we were impressed by the aesthetic quality of the design and its robust construction. All in all, it's good quality equipment for a reasonable price.

Throughout our discussions we felt confident of SportsArt ability and its customer service was very good. Therefore, we awarded SportsArt Fitness UK the contract to supply some 13 training stations including two new eco-powered treadmills that use 32% less energy than traditional treadmills. Other cardio equipment included two ellipticals, recumbent and upright bikes, plus a range of strength training equipment selected to provide a proficient workout for all the major muscle groups.

SportsArt were very supportive in the build up and successfully completed the project to budget and on time. Since then, the equipment has operated reliably and any minor service problems have been dealt with quickly and resolved to our satisfaction. It has been a good experience and we have been so impressed by SportsArt customer service we would have no hesitation in inviting SportsArt to tender for any new equipment in the future or recommending them to others.”
